ANNEX III

Public Transport in The Hague

The public transport network (HTM) of trams and buses in the Netherlands is divided into zones. The number of zones your trip will cross are indicated on the HTM lijnenkaart (bus/tram line map) posted at most stops, or in HTM timetables available at major train stations.

A strippenkaart is a ticket that is valid on any bus, tram, or metro throughout the Netherlands (regardless of where you purchase it), and on some trains (for instance, your HTM bus/tram ticket is good on trains between The Hague Central Station and Voorburg Station). To validate the strippenkaart for your journey, you must stamp it (or have it stamped by the driver) in the bus or tram. The number of strips you need to stamp for your journey is usually equal to the number of zones your trip will cross, plus one strip, for the basic rate. Within the valid time period of your stamped strips, you are entitled to unlimited travel within the zones you are stamped for.
