

DIANA ZEVERIN McCLEAN: Good morning.

My name is Diana Zeverin McClean. I thank you for this opportunity to talk to the Prosecutor. I represent an international women lawyers organisation. The name is Federation Internacional des Femmes de Juridic.

I wish to remind the relationships between our national sovereignty and other issues. I am referring to Article 7, crimes against humanity, of the Rome Statute; the need to incorporate the International Human Rights Convention, the international constitution for the implementation for national justice; the importance to the Office of the contribution of the Prosecutor perhaps to give some guidelines in reference to gender issues, to establish for national justice and for the possibility of the implementation for national justice.

I consider that Argentina is a very good example in Latin America because the national constitution has incorporated the International Human Rights Convention and the Human Rights Convention. But it will be interesting to know what is the situation at this moment of the constitutions and the International Human Rights Convention in other Latin American countries and Spain.

Thank you very much.
